Young to chair I-A playoff committee

Charles E. Young, chancellor of the University of California, Los Angeles, will chair the NCAA Special Committee to Study a Division I-A Football Championship.

The 24-person committee will meet for the first time May 5-6 in Indian Wells, California. A second meeting will be conducted June 2-3 in Kansas City, Missouri. The group is charged with recommending for or against legislation that would create a Division I-A Football Championship.

For the last three months, a research group — also chaired by Young — has been compiling information related to a possible championship. That group's report is expected to be completed by April 25.

Members of the Special Committee to Study a Division I-A Football Championship are McKinley Boston Jr., director of men's athletics, University of Minnesota, Twin Cities; Derrick Brooks, student-athlete, Florida State University; Eugene F. Corrigan, commissioner, Atlantic Coast Conference; John J. Crouthamel, director of athletics, Syracuse University; Bill Curry, head football coach, University of Kentucky; Lake Dawson, student-athlete, University of Notre Dame.

Also, Vincent J. Dooley, director of athletics, University of Georgia; Donnie Duncan, director of athletics, University of Oklahoma; LaVell Edwards, head football coach, Brigham Young University; Prentice Gautt, associate commissioner, Big Eight Conference; Barbara Hedges,

Supreme Court lets ruling stand

The U.S. Supreme Court April 18 refused to reinstate a so-called "due process" law in Nevada that had prevented the Association from applying enforcement procedures in that state.

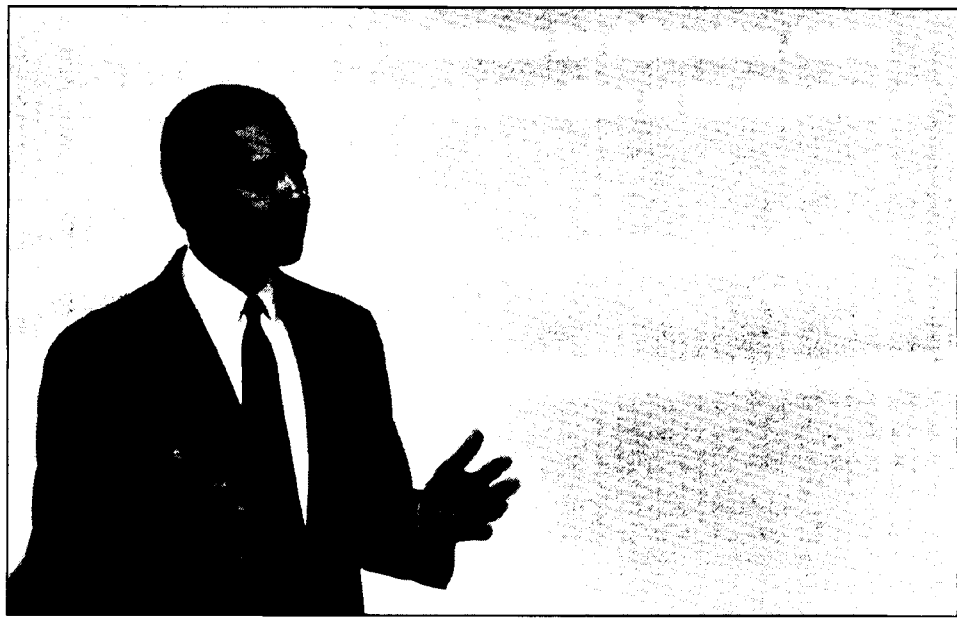

The court, without comment, let stand a Federal judge's ruling that the state law unconstitutionally interfered with interstate commerce by preventing the NCAA from employing the same rules in Nevada as in other states.

The decision ends a case that began in November 1991, when the Association sought relief in Nevada from a statute compelling the NCAA to meet a variety of unattainable requirements in pursuing infractions cases in that state and providing for extreme monetary damages if the Association were found in violation of the statute.

U.S. District Court Judge Howard McKibben overturned the law in June

Pilot workshop raises diversity awareness

Harvey J. Coleman of Coleman Management Consultants of Atlanta assists in presenting the NCAA pilot diversity-training workshop.

By Ronald D. Mott
THE NCAA NEWS STAFF

Participants in the recent NCAA pilot diversity-training workshop came away from the session believing they took a step toward overcoming the biases, prejudices and stereotypes that interfere with the achievement of diversity in intercollegiate athletics.

The workshop, conducted April 11 and 12 in Kansas City, Missouri, primarily was attended by members of the NCAA Minority Opportunities and Interests Committee as well as members of the NCAA Committee on Women's Athletics. In addition, two members of the NCAA Presidents Commission and representatives of the NCAA's management team and other staff members attended the workshop.

One of the workshop's objectives was to enhance each participant's understanding of diversity and why it strengthens rather than weakens organizations.

That message generally was well received, said Charles Whitcomb, chair of recreation/leisure studies and faculty athletics representative at San Jose State

Committees review latest academic-performance reports

When five new reports from the NCAA Academic Performance Study are submitted formally in June, it will mark the end of data collection for the 10-year study that has measured the effects of the Proposition 48 initial-eligibility legislation that was adopted by Division I institutions at the 1983 NCAA Convention.

Among other things, the new reports show that standards created by Prop 48 and 1992 Convention Proposal No. 16 (an index with SAT scores ranging from 700 to 900 and grade-point averages from 2.000 to 2.500) lead to higher graduation rates. Two indexes with wider ranges (400 SAT/3.250 GPA and 670 SAT/2.400 GPA) result in graduation rates that are slightly lower than for Proposal Nos. 16 or 48, but they decrease "false negatives" and decrease disproportionate impacts on minority graduates.

"False negatives" are students who would have graduated but did not qualify under the initial-eligibility legislation.

The new reports were discussed recently by the NCAA Academic Requirements, Minority Opportunities and Interests, and Research Committees as part of the review of Proposal No. 16 before it takes effect in August 1995.

The Academic Requirements

Committee used data from the study when new standards were being discussed in 1991 for the 1992 Convention. The committee recommended to the NCAA Presidents Commission the implementation of an all-inclusive initial-eligibility index (400/3.250), but the Commission

Special committee creates set of recommendations

The NCAA Special Committee to Review Student-Athlete Welfare, Access and Equity has created a set of preliminary recommendations that have been reviewed by the NCAA Presidents Commission and the NCAA Council.

The recommendations will be published in the April 27 issue of The NCAA News. The membership will be asked to comment on them, and revisions will be made accordingly.

The committee anticipates that its final report this summer will recommend several legislative proposals for the 1995 Convention, in addition to recommendations for various NCAA committees.

Proposal No. 174

DeLauder, Peck selected to head review committee

William B. DeLauder, president of Delaware State University, and Richard E. Peck, president of the University of New Mexico, have been selected as co-chairs of the NCAA Special Committee to Review Initial-Eligibility Standards.

The formation of the 27-person panel is related to the review of initial-eligibility standards that are scheduled to go into effect in August 1995. The review is required by 1994 Convention Proposal No. 174.

The NCAA Academic Requirements, Minority Opportunities and Interests, and Research Committees also are examining the new initial-eligibility standards and will report their findings to the special committee.

In a related matter, those three committees have reviewed the latest reports of the NCAA Academic Performance Study. A review of those reports appears on page 1 of this issue.

Search underway for leader of education services group

The national office soon will be divided into five functioning groups instead of four with the creation of the education services group.

Applications are being accepted for the position of group executive director for the group. An advertisement for the position appears in the Market section of this issue of The NCAA News.

The five operating areas contained in the education services group will be education resources, professional development, research, sports sciences and youth programs.

Of those five areas, only education resources is new. Janet M. Justus, NCAA director of eligibility, will become director of education resources May 2. Otherwise, the education services group will become effective when the new group executive director assumes his or her duties.

Division I-A football

Committee appointed; report nears completion

Charles E. Young, chancellor of the University of California, Los Angeles, will chair the 24-member NCAA Special Committee to Study a Division I-A Football Championship.

The committee will meet for the first time May 5-6 in Indian Wells, California. A second meeting is planned for June 2-3 in Kansas City, Missouri. The committee will recommend for or against whether the Association should pursue legislation that would create a Division I A football playoff.

In a related matter, the report of the research group that studied the issue of a Division I-A playoff is to be completed by April 25.

For more information, see page 1 of this issue and the March 23 and March 2 issues of The NCAA News.

Staff contact: Thomas W. Jernstedt.

Next meeting: May 5-6 in Indian Wells, California.

Ethics

Shelton to chair committee examining ethical behavior

The NCAA Presidents Commission has designated William E. Shelton, president of Eastern Michigan University, as chair of a special committee that will focus on "Integrity: sportsmanship and ethical conduct," the 1996 topic for the Commission's strategic plan.

On April 11, Commission Chair Judith E. N. Albino mailed the Commission's report on ethical behavior to chief executive officers and athletics directors at member institutions. That report also appeared in full in the February 16 issue of The NCAA News.

Albino noted that portions of the report contain recommendations of actions that the Commission believes should be taken by institutional officials, rules committees, coaches associations, and conference and officiating organizations. Albino noted, however, that other segments call for the membership to provide responses to the Commission by June.

For more detail, see the February 16 issue of The NCAA News.

Staff contact: John H. Leavens.

Regional seminars

Regional seminars planned for three sites in May, June

The NCAA membership services group will conduct three regional seminars in late May and early June in an effort to provide a continuing-education forum for Divisions I and II institutional and athletics administrators.

A schedule that applies for each of the seminars appeared on page 5 of the April 13 issue of The NCAA News.

The resource center, a popular feature introduced at the 1993 regional seminars, will be open again throughout the seminars.

The seminars will provide information about NCAA legislation and interpretations and will address the roles of various campus constituents in establishing and maintaining institutional control of intercollegiate athletics programs.

The 1994 seminars will be conducted May 11-13 in San Francisco; May 25-27 in Arlington, Virginia, and June 1-3 in New Orleans.

Briefly in the News

Fans can take loyalty to grave

The saying, "Til death do us part," no longer may apply when it comes to the ties between a loyal fan and his or her college or university. Alums can show their devotion even from six feet underground.

A Michigan firm manufactures caskets that are painted in color combinations used by various intercollegiate sports teams. The company, however, does not market the caskets specifically to fans.

"We don't make them with colleges in mind, but some of the colors are somewhat indicative of certain colleges," Jim Kieszowski, president of Oak Grove International of Manistee, Michigan, told The Associated Press.

An Indianapolis company sells the colored caskets, including one in the crimson and cream colors used by Indiana University, Bloomington.

"The IU model has been the one doing the best," said Marty Gaede, owner of the Gaede Casket Company. "It comes in a crimson color, and it has white pinstripes on it with white vinyl swingbar hardware. The interior is ivory velvet and it comes with the choice of either a neutral panel or one that says Indiana Hoosiers. That one has a basketball going through a hoop-and-net combination. It's really a neat thing."

Art Sater of Allen Funeral Home in Indiana is not surprised by the concept.

"We've had a lot of people over the years who obviously are big fans," he said. "...It's interesting to see just how deep their loyalty goes."

At least six feet, it seems.

Washington tour

The Ohio University men's basketball team ran into a couple of friends while in the Washington, D.C., area to play Indiana University, Bloomington, in the first round of the NCAA Division I Men's Basketball Championship in Landover, Maryland.

Rep. Ted Strickland, D-Ohio, invited the team on a tour of the nation's capital. Strickland and press secretary Ron Sylvester (an Ohio graduate) guided the team on tours of many Washington sites, including the Capitol Building and the John F. Kennedy gravesite.

"It was an educational experience for everyone involved," Ohio coach Larry Brandeis University junior Ben Okiwe (left), a guard on the men's basketball team, devotes part of his spare time to helping others at the Waltham (Massachusetts) Boys and Girls Club. Some of that time recently was spent showing Simon Dominique, 11, the finer points of pool.

Hunter said. "Congressman Strickland and press secretary Sylvester had several locations for us to visit. One of the stops was the Capitol Building, then on to the Lincoln Memorial, Kennedy grave, Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, and the best stop of all, the Vietnam Memorial."

Chad Estis, a senior and team cocaptain, said the tour was a great way to culminate his playing career at Ohio.

"There is a lot of stress involved in going to the NCAA (tournament), and going on the tour helped to relieve some of that stress," Estis said. "I could not have asked for a better way to end my basketball career at Ohio University."

Athletics gives back

The student government at Clemson University will use a $300,000 grant provided by the school's athletics department to fund construction of a computer lab in a planned student center and to endow an annual cash award for a top teacher and an annual gift to the university library.

Student body president Martin Driggers said one-third of the grant will be used for construction of the computer lab and the balance will be used to establish a Clemson University Foundation endowment.

"We appreciate the opportunity to work with the athletics department for the enhancement of undergraduate education and teaching," Driggers said. "It has been a rewarding experience to investigate what truly impacts students in the classroom and to work with athletics director (Robert W. Robinson) to make a real difference in that regard. We appreciate his generosity and his genuine concern for the students of Clemson University."

Robinson said the grant will be funded by ticket, television and bowl-game revenues only.

"We wanted to do something to show our appreciation for the student support and enthusiasm that the athletics program has enjoyed over the years..."

Facilities

The University of California, Los Angeles, opened its recently renovated Sunset Field at a February 19 all-star celebration. Sunset Field, home to UCLA's highly successful women's softball teams, received a major facelift, including an increase in permanent seating capacity to 1,050.

The APEX, Lehman College's new multipurpose athletics center, opened April 7 with a public dedication ceremony. The Harlem Globetrotters christened the facility later that evening with a benefit basketball game. The APEX is the largest indoor public sports facility in the New York City borough of the Bronx. The $57 million complex is a 140,000-square-foot facility that boasts one of New York City's two Olympic-size swimming pools. It also features an athletics arena with seating for 1,300, an auxiliary recreation gymnasium with a 110-meter jogging track, four racquetball courts, five outdoor tennis courts, a ballet studio for instruction and performance, an aerobics studio, a fitness center staffed by a sports psychologist, gymnastics room, exercise science and biomechanical laboratories, a computer center, audio-visual room, and classrooms.

Renovations of 29-year-old Huskie Stadium at Northern Illinois University should be completed in time for the 1995 football season. As part of the "Northern Advantage" initiative at the institution, Huskie Stadium will receive a new permanent east grandstand that will seat between 9,000 and 12,000 spectators. The stadium improvements are part of a comprehensive upgrade of athletics facilities at Northern Illinois.

Fact file

In 1988, the NCAA membership approved the first significant change in the authority of the NCAA Council (which was created in 1921) by giving that body the ability to adopt administrative regulations for the efficient implementation of the Association's legislative policies. In 1990, the Council was accorded the authority to adopt noncontroversial amendments to NCAA legislation (except in the areas of recruiting and eligibility).

Division III faces tough questions

By Alvin J. Van Wie

THE INTERCOLLEGIATE ATHLETIC FORUM

Ranking high on the NCAA's restructuring agenda will be the question of the growing size and diversity of the Division III membership.

In regard to that issue, the committee studying restructuring most certainly will look at a model that would separate the division by size of institution or a model that would divide Division III into two separate divisions, one composed of state-supported institutions and one composed of private institutions. Both of those models have been discussed and debated for many years in the hotel lobbies and hallways at the NCAA Convention, and both models have their supporters as well as detractors.

There also are those in Division III who feel there is a closely related issue to that of membership structure. That issue is not only who the participants are, especially as it relates to transfer students from Division I institutions, but also the lack of any academic requirements for participation in Division III athletics. In reality, the only basic requirement for participation at many institutions in Division III is that a student-athlete be a full-time student.

This question became crystallized when a participant in the 1993 Division III Football Championship had 21 transfer students on a traveling squad of 55 and nine of those transfers were from Division I programs. All nine of the Division I transfers were in the starting lineup. What startled some was the fact that their field goal and extra-point kicker had kicked in a Division I contest earlier in the season and now was kicking in the Division III championship game.

Is this an isolated incident where the Division I transfer has played a dominant role in Division III championship play? Division III basketball coaches will tell you that the last three Division III national championships were directly affected by Division I transfers. Without question, the Division I scholarship athlete who transfers to a Division III institution brings with him or her outstanding physical skill that the vast majority of Division III athletes do not possess. Hence, a legitimate question asked by many Division III football and basketball coaches is: "Can I compete in the future for a national championship without the physical skills of Education hindered by competition?

It is very disheartening to read the guest editorial of Secretary of Education Richard Riley (March 23 issue) when one recognizes the potential worthiness of his ideas fall short of reality because he fails altogether to address the underlying cause of our irresponsible state of education affairs: the pervasive element of competition and overreliance on outmoded grading systems in K-12 education.

Continuing to press this traditional competitive environment on developing minds and bodies secularizes the learning experience by emphasizing the worldly pursuit of gaining advantage over players, classmates, teammates, friends and maybe even family members.

The goals of winning and gaining recognition in sport and education usurp the chance for free expression and gainful insights to be built within a cooperative climate.

If we really want to improve the K-12 education and create a new moral fabric of learning, we should build educational objectives — including evaluation tion— around cooperative programming that places students and educators in a less threatening environment.

Guide learning and self-expression through cooperative projects and competency-based progression. We can make the K-12 experience, in both academics and sport, more a challenge to self-growth through intrinsic motivation and then in so doing enlist parents and community, redefine our delivery of engaging material, and introduce technology as Secretary Riley would suggest.

Out of season, out of favor

According to a 1991 Sports Illustrated survey, the sport of baseball is a little less popular than football, but it is much more popular than basketball with the American public.

Why then does college basketball out-draw college baseball? What is wrong with college baseball? These questions probably have several answers, but without a doubt, the most obvious answer is that we are trying to play college baseball during the wrong time of the year. We're trying to play most of our season in what the American public perceives to be basketball season.

If we want to improve baseball attendance, we must accept the fact that this public is not going to "buy" a sport out-of-season. Example: There have been several attempts to form professional football leagues during the summer months (pro football is the most popular sport in the United States), but the public will not buy it.

These leagues are not being played when football is "supposed to be played." Why then should we think that the American public would support college baseball during the basketball season?

□ Opinions

Get back to the basics of broadcasting

Brian Lowry, columnist

Daily Variety

"(As sports coverage proliferates), new personalities try to scream over the din for attention in an increasingly crowded environment. Those same factors currently push and pull virtually all facets of broadcasting, though critics usually reserve their hand-wringing for news and its clones.

"What genre of television, however, has more impact than sports, which traditionally produces most of the year's highest-rated TV events? There's no reason sports broadcasting has to be an inferior product.

"An immediate improvement would be to call less on former athletes and coaches, sacrificing a degree of insider's knowledge in exchange for people who are trained communicators. Another plus would involve more straightforward analysis and less of the histrionics that work for (Dick) Vitale or (John) Madden but feel stilted from most other announcers.

"A final point, lost in the tendency to overproduce big events, would be to simply respect the game. Any established sport brings with it loyal fans who will watch in spite of, not because of, the on-air talent. The recent NCAA championship game also had more natural drama than just about anything TV can offer, short of a Richard Simmons Deal-a-Meal infomercial.

"Many sports enthusiasts have become fond of quoting the 'Field of Dreams' line, 'If you build it, they will come.' When it comes to TV sports, if you leave it alone, they'll not only come, they might even stay."

Women's basketball

Filip Bondy, sportswriter

New York Daily News

"Despite the claustrophobic schedule, there was much to like about the NCAA women's basketball championship. It still has the feel of a scholastic event.

"There was no souvenir frenzy here, and little of the pretense you find in Charlotte, N.C., site of the men's Final Four. The game was downtown, not at some remote arena surrounded by parking lots. The place was sold out, yet there were no ticket scalpers. There was no President, no first lady....The women, at least, offer something different. There were plenty of stories in Richmond, Virginia, where Charlotte Smith and Sylvia Crawley of North Carolina were dunking effortlessly during warm-up drills.

"There is nobody more fun to watch, more charismatic, than Smith and Marion Jones. They glow, like the great athletes....People watch. Last year, the women's championship drew a greater rating than the NBA game that day. There is another audience out there, another type of athlete. There is room for her in the gym, in the newspaper."

Donna Lopiano, executive director

Women's Sports Foundation

The Associated Press

Discussing lower television ratings for the finals of the 1994 NCAA Division I Women's Basketball Championship:

"It's like Russian roulette. When you don't have very many games on, it's like a six-cylinder gun and so few people get a chance to see it. If you happen to get the cylinder with the bullet in it, it kills you....

"Conversely, when you have got the great game and that's the one time people tune in, of course they're likely to come back."

Coaching

Bob Ryan, columnist

The Boston Globe

"Nolan Richardson says white coaches are always hailed as canny strategists by the white male media. Earth to Nolan: 1. Guy Lewis. 2. Charles G. (Lefty) Driesell. 3. Dale Brown. 4. Jim Boeheim. This Gang of Four has enough derogatory press clippings to wallpaper the Pentagon six times over, and 99.9 percent of the slams have come from white male writers.

"C'mon, coach. We're Equal Opportunity Slanderers."

Lute Olsen, men's basketball coach

University of Arizona

The New York Times

"This is such a wacky business. After North Carolina was eliminated from the tournament, I heard some people grumbling about Dean Smith. Dean Smith! I put him in the category with John Wooden in terms of our profession. But people aren't satisfied."

"There's no question the jobs (of coaching men's and women's basketball) are comparable. I think the recruiting is the same, I think the on-the-floor coaching is the same.

"The argument always seems to be that, well, the crowds are different. But in some locations, you can even say the crowds for women's basketball are greater. There's a definite desire to have equal pay for equal work."

Success shadows much-traveled tennis player

By Steven R. Hagwell
THE NCAA NEWS STAFF

When Lucie Ludvigova left her native Czechoslovakia and embarked on a collegiate tennis career in the United States, she likened the move to an adventure.

"I had no expectations," she recalled. "I had played some tournaments (in the United States), but didn't know too much about the culture or lifestyle. I knew there would be adjustments. I didn't know what to expect, so I just looked at it like it was a big adventure."

But Ludvigova didn't anticipate just how adventurous her collegiate career would become.

Since beginning collegiate play three years ago, Ludvigova has embarked on a trail that has seen her compete at a junior college that dropped its women's tennis program, a Division II institution from which she transferred and a Division I program.

Ludvigova's latest adventure is unfolding at the University of Texas at Austin, where she competes with the Longhorns.

Success has been constant

As adventurous as Ludvigova's career has been, there has been one constant: success.

In two seasons of collegiate competition before arriving at Texas, Ludvigova won one national team title and two national individual titles. In 1993, while competing at Grand Canyon University, a Division II institution, she posted a 35-1 singles record and captured the Division II women's singles title. Her only loss was to a Division I competitor.

Success has followed her to Austin.

Competing at the Division I level for the first time, Ludvigova quickly has become one of the nation's top players. Only a junior, she was ranked No. 1 in the Intercollegiate Tennis Association

No matter where she's been, Lucie Ludvigova has enjoyed success on the tennis court.

(ITA) rankings for much of the season, and has compiled an impressive singles mark of 29-3 — 15-2 while competing at No. 1 singles. She advanced to the final of all three ITA indoor championships, winning titles at the All-American Championships in October and the indoor national championships in February.

"(Lucie's) biggest strength as a player is her mental toughness.

She's so tough upstairs," said Jeff Moore, women's tennis coach at Texas. "She's confident that she has the ability to compete with anybody."

"She has an all-court game," said Carol Sandvig, women's tennis coach at Grand Canyon and Ludvigova's former coach. "She doesn't back down. She believes when she walks on the court that no one can beat her."

Junior college titlist

The 1991 Czechoslovakian indoor champion, Ludvigova began her collegiate adventure by enrolling at Midland Junior College in Texas in fall 1991. After guiding Midland to the national junior college team title and winning a national singles crown (Flight 2), Ludvigova soon found herself embarking on yet another adventure.

She had little choice: Midland dropped its tennis program after the 1992 season.

Ludvigova's next stop on what quickly was becoming a U.S. tour took her to Phoenix, where she enrolled at Grand Canyon in fall 1992.

"We got along from the start," recalled Sandvig. "I've been to Czechoslovakia in my summer travels, so there was a common bond."

"She is such a positive force. As a person, she's very humble. On the court, she works extremely hard. You can't hit enough balls to that child."

That bond continued to grow through the next year. So, too, did Ludvigova's mastery on the court. Ranked No. 1 in singles before the season began, Ludvigova lived up to all expectations with a 33-victory streak and the Division II singles title.

But while Ludvigova enjoyed her time at Grand Canyon immensely, there also were times when competition became tedious. It was then that Ludvigova's thoughts turned to Division I, to what it would be like to compete at the top level of collegiate tennis.

Ludvigova didn't have to wait long for her next adventure. A brief encounter with a friend sparked Ludvigova's interest in Texas. A short time later, she found herself facing yet another new challenge, this time at Texas.

"I could have stayed at Grand Canyon if I wanted," said Ludvigova. "I had lots of fun and I enjoyed myself. I didn't want to move. I didn't want to leave my friends, but when I got the opportunity...."

Quickly established herself

Ludvigova wasted little time making the most of her opportunity. Joining a Texas squad that returned six players from a national-championship team, Ludvigova quickly established herself not only as one of the team's top players, but the nation's as well.

Ranked No. 49 in the ITA pre-season singles rankings, Ludvigova won 25 of her first 26 matches — including 21 in a row — and quickly found herself ranked No. 1.

"I thought she would play No. 1 at Texas and be in the top five nationally," said Sandvig. "When she came through the first three legs of the ITA All-American Championships and was in the finals of all three, I knew...."

"I expected certainly for Lucie to be an impact player," said Moore. "I didn't necessarily expect her to go all the way to the top (of the rankings) in her first year, but I'm not totally surprised."

Ranked or not, Ludvigova is not resting on her accomplishments. A tireless worker, she continues to work on improving her game and her mental toughness. She says she needs to be more aggressive.

As for her recent success, Ludvigova says she is a bit surprised. She says her goals for her first year at Texas were to fit in and contribute to the team.

"I just wanted to try really hard, play 100 percent and keep my concentration high," she said. "I just wanted to work hard like everyone else. I was hoping to play top four (singles)."

And the future? Not surprisingly, Ludvigova has no expectations. She simply is approaching her time at Texas as she has everything that came before: "Like a big adventure."

Committee focuses on cohort data of academic study

The NCAA Academic Requirements Committee continued to review information regarding the Academic Performance Study at a special meeting April 13-14 in Kansas City, Missouri.

The review is a result of the adoption of 1994 NCAA Convention Proposal No. 174, which directs appropriate NCAA committees — including the Academic Requirements Committee — to review initial-eligibility standards to determine their impact on minority student-athletes.

The committee focused on the 1986, 1987 and 1988 cohorts of the Academic Performance Study to determine if radical differences exist between those and the 1984 and 1985 cohorts the committee reviewed during its regularly scheduled meeting in February.

While the committee considers the 1984 and 1985 cohorts more useful and relevant because no student-athletes were screened out by Proposition 48, it determined that the new cohort data are consistent with those of 1984 and 1985.

In addition, the committee heard a five-hour presentation by John J. McArdle, chair of the NCAA Data Analysis Group that provided the original information regarding the impact of Proposition 48 and the projected impact of the initial-eligibility index.

The committee took no actions regarding the initial-eligibility standards — which were adopted in 1992 and are scheduled for implementation in August 1995 — on the basis that the issues are too important and the material presented was too complex to permit immediate recommendations.

The committee, however, will continue to review the Academic

In other actions at its April 13-14 meeting in Kansas City, Missouri, the Academic Requirements Committee:

■ Decided to recommend to the NCAA Initial-Eligibility Clearinghouse that American Sign Language may be accepted as a foreign language core course, provided the course meets all existing core-course requirements.

■ Reviewed suggestions for deregulation in NCAA Bylaw 14 (pertaining to eligibility) that were provided by the NCAA Legislative Review Committee and agreed to forward comments to that committee by April 25.

Performance Study and identify any additional information needed from the NCAA Research Committee before meeting again in May.

The committee hopes at that time to reach some conclusions regarding initial-eligibility standards. Recommendations will be forwarded to the newly appointed NCAA Special Committee to Review Initial-Eligibility Standards, as well as to the NCAA Presidents Commission and NCAA Council.

Footnote: Players having little problem adapting to batter's-box rule

By Theodore A. Breidenthal
THE NCAA NEWS STAFF

Only in dreams did members of the NCAA Baseball Rules Committee imagine that implementation of its new batter's-box rule would succeed as quickly as it has.

After its July 1993 meeting, the committee fully expected numerous problems during the first few years of the rule's use as players, coaches and umpires adjusted to the requirement that a hitter keep one foot in the batter's box while at the plate (see accompanying description of the rule).

But few problems have surfaced so far this season.

Good job by umpires

William E. Thurston, head baseball coach at Amherst College and secretary-rules editor of the Baseball Rules Committee, said umpires have done a good job handling the new rule and coaches effectively have taught their players what they can and cannot do.

Said Thurston, "Players are not wandering outside the batter's box, unnecessarily delaying the game. I think in two or three years we won't even think about it — it will be a natural part of the game."

As rules editor, Thurston speaks often with umpires from around the country, and he makes a point of asking them about the new rule and its effectiveness in their regions.

"They all say, 'It hasn't been a problem. We make it a point to talk about the rule in our pregame discussions with coaches. We haven't had to enforce the rule often. The games really have been played at a quick pace.' I think it really shows what a great job coaches have done coaching this rule and that umpires are using common sense enforcing it," Thurston said.

Not sure game is faster

Jon Bible, NCAA national coordinator of umpires and supervisor of umpires for the Southwest Conference, agrees that the new rule has not caused problems, but he is not so sure that it has produced a faster-paced game.

Said Bible, "It really has not been an issue in our part of the country. We haven't had one problem with the new rule, but the games haven't been any faster or slower than last year. We didn't have a problem to start with. In the areas where there was a problem, I guess this rule has helped."

The sole intent of the batter's box rule, Thurston said, is to speed up the game and eliminate dead time — not to penalize or to put a batter at a disadvantage. The rules committee asked umpires to work with and communicate the intent of the rule to batters, and this has helped to prevent hitters from leaving the box illegally and being penalized, he said.

Added Thurston, "Most coaches and umpires really believe the game is moving at a much faster pace. Because batters are ready to hit, pitchers are working much faster between pitches. So far this season, we have played mostly seven-inning games, and these games have averaged just under two hours."

Awareness has helped

Gene McArtor, head baseball coach at the University of Missouri, Columbia, said his team has not been penalized by the new rule this season.

"The awareness of the rule by coaches, umpires and players has been a big help," McArtor said. "I think the key to its success is that umpires have worked with the hitters so they won't have to enforce the penalty. In talking with other coaches in the conference, they feel it has really worked."

Thurston said one of the initial concerns about the new rule was how umpires would handle the penalty when a batter is down in the count two strikes, or even in a potential game-winning situation with two outs. "Most of the umpires I have talked to are calling time and instructing the batter to get back in the box instead of calling him out," Thurston said. "We have had a few

Batter's-box rule

The batter's-box rule, which is designed to speed up play by controlling the actions of the batter between pitches, states that a batter must keep at least one foot in the batter's box throughout the time at bat. The batter may, however, leave the batter's box, but not the dirt area surrounding home plate, when:

- The batter swings at a pitch;
- The batter is forced out of the box by the pitch;
- The pitcher calls timeout;
- The pitcher leaves the dirt area of the pitching mound after receiving the ball;
- The pitcher throws to a base during a pick-off attempt;
- An appeal is made at any base;
- The batter requests and is granted time;
- Or the defensive team attempts a play.

If a batter intentionally leaves the batter's box and none of the exceptions applies, the umpire shall award a strike against the batter. The pitcher does not have to pitch, but the ball is live.

The rule also states that a batter may leave the batter's box and the dirt area surrounding home plate when time is granted for the purpose of making a substitution, an offensive conference, or a defensive timeout or conference.

incidents where umpires called a player out on strikes who stepped out of the box, but it has been rare."

One of those incidents involved the U.S. Naval Academy. Navy coach Bob McDonald was not happy early in the season with umpires' implementation of the rule, especially during tight games.

Said McDonald, "When we were playing in California early in the season, we had several guys (called out by the penalty) for inadvertently stepping out of the box when they had two strikes. And this was at crucial times in ballgames."

Using common sense

"The umpires are using more common sense now and they are communicating with the players. It has not been a problem lately."

McArtor expressed concern about the future if the penalty is not applied when a violation occurs.

"I think the concern in the future is if there is never a penalty, will the hitters take advantage of it?"

Thurston thinks the rules committee can tighten the language so the rule is less confusing for umpires.

"Perhaps we can generalize the situations where a player can leave the box with both feet so that an umpire doesn't have to run through a seven-point checklist," Thurston said.

Compliance briefs

General information

1994-95 NCAA-required compliance forms: The 1994-95 NCAA certification of compliance for staff members of athletics departments (form 94-2) recently was mailed to compliance-forms designees at member institutions. The designees also were mailed a copy of the cover memorandum for the 1994-95 NCAA certification of compliance for institutions (form 94-1) that was sent to the institution's chief executive officer, and a listing of NCAA-required forms for the 1994-95 academic year.

Each institutional designee should forward immediately form 94-2 and the cover memorandum to the individual(s) responsible for the completion and administration of the form. The certification of compliance forms are due in the NCAA national office September 15.

The student-athlete statement (forms 94-3 a, b and c), the student-athletes' affirmation of eligibility (forms 94-4 a, b and c), the drug-testing consent (forms 94-2 d, e and f) and the squad list (form 94-5) also will be mailed to institutional designees in mid-May.

Questions regarding forms 94-1, 94-2 and 94-5 should be referred to the compliance services staff. Questions regarding forms 94-3 and 94-4 should be referred to the legislative services staff.

Coaches certification: A revised copy of the 1994-95 examination instructions for Division II was mailed April 8 to commissioners of selected NCAA Divisions II and III conferences.

The revised copy of instructions notes that the correct code for Form C is 06.

The 1994-95 coaches certification program — including certification procedures, recruiting examinations, answer keys, Scranton sheets and other materials — was mailed to Divisions I, II and selected Division III commissioners March 2.

Item Nos. 4 and 6 of the certification procedures have been revised. The change to Item No. 4 is intended to clarify the certification requirements for individuals who wish to be certified during the interim August 1 through July 31 annual certification period. The addition to Item No. 6 indicates that participants who require a retest may not be given the same test version at two consecutive testing opportunities.

Questions concerning the tests or the coaches certification program should be submitted to Garnett H. Purnell or Athena Yiamouyiannis of the compliance services and legislative services staffs, respectively.

Faculty athletics representatives (FARs): In accordance with the provisions of NCAA Constitution 6.1.3, a member institution is required to designate an individual to serve as faculty athletics representative. Members of the compliance services staff reviewed the information and sports-sponsorship forms sent to the national office during the past five years and reported the following data concerning the turnover of FARs and the current gender composition:

■ During the 1989-90 academic year, there were 41 newly appointed FARs in Divisions I, II and III (18, nine and 14, respectively).

■ During the 1990-91 academic year, there were 121 new appointments (32, 29 and 60, respectively).

■ During the 1991-92 academic year, there were 122 new appointments (34, 31 and 57, respectively).

■ During the 1992-93 academic year, there were 107 new appointments (34, 35 and 38, respectively).

■ During the 1993-94 academic year, there were 124 new appointments (breakdown unavailable at press time).

There are 866 individuals serving as FARs at member institutions, 744 male and 122 female.

Regional seminars: The 1994 NCAA regional seminars will be conducted May 11-13 in San Francisco; May 25-26 in Arlington, Virginia, and June 1-3 in New Orleans. The seminars will be targeted primarily for Divisions I and II compliance coordinators, athletics administrators and faculty athletics representatives. The format again will offer a number of topic-specific breakout sessions, including a hands-on training session for the NCAA Compliance Assistant software.

Those attending will be provided a 1994-95 NCAA Guide to Rules Compliance. The guide will include rules information, a who-to-call guide, a resource file checklist and other material concerning the Compliance Assistant software, NCAA Initial-Eligibility Clearinghouse, legislative services database, legislative process, eligibility appeals and enforcement.

Those planning to attend a regional seminar are reminded to complete and return the seminar-registration card. The returned cards will assist NCAA staff in preparing name badges and registration plackets. Also, to ensure the group rate, a completed hotel room-reservation form must be sent to the appropriate hotel address as soon as possible.

Those interested in more information about the 1994 seminars can contact Chrystal L. Gates at the national office.

NCAA guides: The 1994-95 NCAA Guide to Financial Aid, the 1994-95 NCAA Guide to Recruiting and the 1994-95 NCAA Guide to Eligibility are scheduled for publication and distribution to the membership in May. The revised guides will include updated legislation and compliance calendars that list the tasks that may be performed monthly. The guides will be distributed to Divisions I and II conferences and institutional compliance coordinators, as well as other interested parties on campus (for example, director of admissions, registration and financial aid, and recruiting coordinators).

Compliance strategies: In accordance with the provisions of NCAA Bylaw 14.4, to be eligible to represent an institution in NCAA intercollegiate athletics, a student-athlete who has completed at least one academic year in residence or used one season of eligibility in a sport must maintain satisfactory progress toward a baccalaureate or equivalent degree program. To ensure that student-athletes who are subject to satisfactory-progress requirements (for Divisions I and II) are identified, institutional administrators responsible for certifying continuing eligibility may wish to consider the following strategies:

■ Use fall eligibility lists, conference eligibility lists and squad lists to identify the student-athletes for whom continuing eligibility needs to be certified.

■ Make sure that squad list includes the names of all student-athletes (nonqualifiers, partial qualifiers, red-shirts, transfer student-athletes and medical hardships).

■ Require coaches to submit complete rosters of all participating student-athletes before the first practice in a given sport and have the lists updated regularly. Prohibit practice until lists are submitted.

■ Institute a strict policy preventing any student-athlete from receiving equipment, being assigned a locker, using training and weight rooms, and participating in practice until his or her eligibility has been certified (subject to

Fifteen summer basketball events gain certification

TEAM workshop scheduled

The NCAA national office will be the site of a facility alcohol management instructor-development workshop sponsored by TEAM (Techniques for Effective Alcohol Management).

The NCAA is a member of TEAM, a national coalition of Federal agencies, businesses and organizations that seek to reduce the incidence of alcohol-impaired driving.

The workshop at the NCAA offices in Overland Park, Kansas, will be May 10-12. Another workshop will be offered August 16-18 at the USAir Arena in Landover, Maryland.

TEAM's facility alcohol management (FAM) program encourages athletics and other public-assembly facility managers to assess their institutional policies regarding management of alcohol use and helps train employees to implement these policies.

The three-day workshop will allow participants to examine issues that affect a facility's alcohol policies. Participants will be taught how to conduct a management-assessment session at their facilities; the ultimate goal is to train employees to inform all arena/stadium employees of their roles for supporting management policies on alcohol sales and consumption.

Those interested in TEAM registration materials can contact the NCAA sports sciences staff at the national office.

Division III

Membership must face tough questions before restructuring takes place

a Division I transfer in my program?"

What has caused this apparent influx of Division I transfers into Division III in the past three or four years? There are those who would point to the 1990 NCAA Convention, where legislation was passed to liberalize the transfer rules for Division III. I am well aware of that Convention as I presided over it as Division III vice-president and strongly supported the proposed legislation.

By eliminating several pages of rules and regulations from the NCAA Manual, which included its share of legalistic language, effective dates, hours of transferable credit, numerous amendments and modifications, and just enough confusion to keep the Division III athletics director never quite sure if a transfer student was eligible or not until he/she called Kansas City.

The principle behind the elimination of the transfer rules was that a student-athlete who transfers and is paying for either part or all of her/her education at a Division III institution should not be deprived of any part of the educational experience.

And since those of us in Division III believe that athletics is part of the educational experience, what right do we have to tell a student that he/she must sit out a year for the simple reason that he/she decided to attend another educational institution for a variety of reasons? We believe that student-athletes should be treated in the same manner in all aspects of their college life as any other member of the student body.

When this proposed legislation, which would remove the one-year waiting period and make a student-athlete immediately eligible upon transferring, was brought before the NCAA Council, dire warnings came from members of the NCAA staff as well as from some Council members who represented Division I institutions.

The warning was, "The elimination of these rules will open the floodgates and it won't be long before your Division III championships will be dominated by transfers from Division I." Those of us who supported the elimination of the one-year waiting period weren't convinced that this would happen. The legislation moved to the Convention floor (January 1990). Again, the same concerns were expressed by a few, but the legislation that removed the one-year waiting period was passed overwhelmingly.

At the January 1991 Convention, the delegates said that they may have gone too far and passed legislation that stated that a student-athlete must be eligible at the institution from which he/she is transferring in order to be eligible at the new institution. (There were one or two impact athletes who would not have been eligible at their previous institutions, who did transfer, played immediately and were instrumental in their teams having a highly successful season.)

But how long did it take for the prophets, who predicted that Division I athletes would have a major impact on Division III championships, to be proven correct? Not long!

It should be understood that I am not criticizing any institution that has had Division I athletes play for it. Those institutions have applied the rules as they are presently constituted. I would be hypocritical if I failed to admit that during my tenure as head basketball coach at the College of Wooster I would have loved to have had a point guard or pivot man transfer from a Division I institution, be eligible immediately and enhance the team's ability to have a championship season and move on to a national tournament.

When you combine the liberalization of the transfer rule with a lack of any academic standards, there are those who feel that not only have the floodgates opened but also raise the legitimate concern regarding the academic integrity of those who compete in what many of us consider to be the truly amateur division, Division III.

There are those who further raise the question, "Are we really that much different in 1993 than we were in the early 1900s when athletes moved from institution to institution without regard to academic qualifications or academic purpose?"

Hence, some of the questions that the Division III membership may want to consider are:

■ Are these Division I transfers legitimate students who would have been accepted as incoming first-year students at the Division III institution, and are they pursuing an academic program that will lead to graduation?

■ Should a transfer from a scholarship institution (Division I or II) be treated any differently than a transfer from a Division III institution?

■ Did the legislation that allows an athlete to participate for two different institutions in the same season go too far?

■ Should there be minimum academic standards for participation in Division III as there now are in Divisions I and II?

■ Has the image of Division III, as the division that has put the highest possible value on the concept of the student-athlete, been tarnished by opening the division to transfers as well as by the lack of uniform academic standards for participation?

The answers to these and other similar questions would go a long way in determining the future direction of Division III, regardless of the way in which the division is ultimately restructured.

Points increase, but field-goal percentage decreases for I men

Additional points scored because of quicker shot clock

By Gary K. Johnson
NCAA STATISTICS COORDINATOR

Across the nation in Division I men's basketball this season, the shots were not dropping, which in turn caused numbers to drop in three shooting-percentage categories.

Even so, points per game rose, thanks to the quicker shot clock.

According to final national trends for games involving all 301 Division I men's teams, field-goal shooting during the 1993-94 season was at 44.3 percent, the lowest since 44.2 in 1970. Free-throw shooting continued its five-year plunge to 67.1 percent, which equals the percentage of 1959—the last year it was that low.

There is talk of moving the three-point stripe back, even though the shooting percentage in trey land reached an all-time low of 34.5. The reason for the possible move is because three-pointers made and attempted per game reached all-time highs. More than one of every four shots from the field is now from three-point range, compared to less than one of every six shots in 1987, the first year of the trey.

Since that year, the number of three-pointers made per game for both teams combined has increased every year except for a slight decrease in 1992 (from 10.0 in 1991 to 9.9 in 1992). Also, the attempts have gone up every year

The following chart shows national trends for three-point field goals made, attempted and the percentage since its inception in 1987.

1992	9.9	28.0	35.5
1993	10.5	29.8	35.4
1994	11.4	33.0	34.5

Although all shooting percentages are on the decline, almost three extra points per game were scored this season after the shot clock was shortened from 45 seconds to 35. That roughly translates to about 24,000 extra points being scored this season.

In various other categories for the season, both teams combined per game to average 75.6 rebounds, 29.1 assists, 6.5 blocked shots, 15.5 steals and 31.9 turnovers.

The team leaders in these categories were Baylor at 50.3 rebounds per game, Arkansas with 20.2 assists, Howard with 6.6 blocked shots, Texas with 13.3 steals and Temple with only 8.6 turnovers a game.

Three-point shots (and records) fall this season for I women

Teams take more, make more, than in any other year

By James F. Wright
NCAA STATISTICS SERVICES MANAGER

It should have been no surprise that this year's Division I women's championship game was decided by a three-point shot. Charlotte Smith's dramatic trey with less than one second left gave North Carolina the national title and was the last of the 56,966 three-point baskets that produced another record year for both three-point shots made and attempted.

After 8,174 games, final compilations of this season's statistical trends show the nation's 292 Division I women's teams produced 6.97 three-pointers per game (both teams combined) on 22.12 attempts.

Both marks broke records established last year and continued the trend that has produced increased numbers every year since the three-point was introduced nationwide in 1987-88.

More than one out of every six field-goal attempts this season was a three-point attempt. Three-point percentage went up slightly (31.50 percent) over last year's record low (31.43

Despite a record low for both total field goals made (51.18) and overall field-goal percentage (41.37 percent), points per game increased by 1.56 points compared with 1992-93, thanks to the three-point and free throws.

The women's game established records for free throws made (28.71) and attempted (43.30). But free-throw percentage dropped to 66.31 percent, the lowest mark since 1987-88.

Postgraduate scholarship winners announced

Twenty-eight basketball players — 14 men and 14 women — at NCAA member institutions have been awarded postgraduate scholarships of $5,000 each.

In addition to the basketball scholarships, 29 awards have been presented during this academic year to student-athletes in football, and 68 awards (34 each for men and women) will be given in other sports in which the NCAA conducts championships competition. A total of 125 such scholarships are awarded annually by the Association.

Of the 28 basketball scholarships, 10 were awarded to Division I student-athletes, 10 in Divisions II and III, and the remaining eight at large.

To qualify, a student-athlete must maintain a minimum grade-point average of 3.000 (4.000 scale) or its equivalent and must have performed with distinction as a member of the varsity team in the sport in which the student-athlete was nominated.

The student-athlete also must intend to continue academic work beyond the baccalaureate degree as a full-time graduate student. In addition, the student-athlete must have behaved, both on and off the field, in a manner that has brought credit to the student-athlete, the institution and intercollegiate athletics.

Following are the accomplishments of the 1993-94 NCAA postgraduate scholarship winners in basketball:

Men's Division I

David Oblie Ardayfio (U.S. Military Academy, 3.160 grade-point average in economics) — Ardayfio is only the third player in Army history to record both 1,200 points and 700 rebounds — placing him in the top 10 in school history in both categories. The Patriot League's rookie of the year in 1991, Ardayfio was elected Army's team captain for this season and averaged 18 points and eight rebounds per game in addition to being among Patriot League leaders in field-goal percentage. He is a two-time Patriot League scholar athlete and a recipient of the Superintendent's Award for the 1993-94 academic year. After Ardayfio fulfills his five-year commitment to the Army in 1999, he hopes to begin postgraduate work in business administration.

Marcus Paul Blucas (Wake Forest University, 3.207 grade-point average in business) — Blucas progressed to become a consistent starter for the Demon Deacons by his senior year and was regarded as the squad's top defensive specialist. He became the team's motivational leader after Wake Forest lost its season debut this year and helped inspire the Deacons to their fourth consecutive NCAA tournament appearance. An Atlantic Coast Conference honor roll member, Blucas also was awarded a $3,000 ACC postgraduate scholarship. He expects to attend the University of Virginia School of Law next fall.

Jeffrey A. Brown (Gonzaga University, 3.640 grade-point average in finance) — Brown transferred to Gonzaga from the University of Washington after his freshman season and played a pivotal role in helping the Bulldogs improve from 8-20 in 1991 to their first West Coast Conference championship in 1994 and a berth in the National Invitation Tournament. Brown averaged more than 20 points and six rebounds per game as Gonzaga's starting center and was named the West Coast player of the year. A three-time all-West Coast scholar-athlete, Brown also was named 1994 GTE men's academic all-American of the year. He is considering playing professional basketball in Europe before entering medical school.

Peter James Eisenrich (Santa Clara University, 3.720 grade-point average in finance) — Eisenrich ranks among the school leaders in career three-point field goals, shooting better than 40 percent from three-point range this season. He helped the Broncos to a 19-12 campaign in 1993 and an upset of the University of Arizona in the first round of the NCAA tournament. An all-West Coast Conference performer, Eisenrich was named Santa Clara's most valuable player in 1993 and was tabbed as the most valuable player in this year's Cable Car Classic. A 1994 third-team GTE academic all-American, Eisenrich intends to study international relations in graduate school.

Kevin Michael Rankin (Northwestern University, 3.250 grade-point average in history) — Rankin is among the top five in several Wildcat career categories, including scoring, rebounding, blocked shots and steals. A two-time all-Big Ten Conference performer, Rankin was named Northwestern's most valuable player this season after averaging more than 15 points and eight rebounds per game. Rankin is a 1994 second-team GTE academic all-American and a two-time all-Big Ten academic selection. Rankin hopes to play professional basketball before entering graduate school.

Despite having to endure four months of chemotherapy, Dunkle managed to complete his course work and scored the highest grade of his class on the final examination in biology. He was back on the basketball court the next fall as a starter for a Franklin team that finished 25-4. He has started all but four games since his sophomore year and has averaged nearly 10 points and four rebounds per game. He is a Lafayette student tutor and a three-time participant in the New Jersey Beach Environmental Cleanup project. He intends to study podiatry in graduate school.

Patrick Lynn Holloway (Regis University [Colorado], 3.324 grade-point average in business administration/marketing) — Holloway was elected team captain this year despite having played only for two seasons after transferring from Davidson College. He has averaged double figures in scoring in each of his two seasons and was named to the all-Colorado Athletic Conference team in 1993. Holloway is active in the Regis Minority Affairs Committee and devotes time as a teacher's aid at a Denver elementary school and as a basketball coach at the Martin Luther King Jr. Recreation Center. He hopes to begin work on a master's degree in business administration next fall.

Todd Clifford Kenyon (Colorado School of Mines, 3.553 grade-point average in engineering physics) — Kenyon is among the school's career scoring leaders and scored more than 20 points in a game 25 times during his career. Morlock is active in student government, the Fellowship of Christian Athletes, Habitat for Humanity, and several youth and community programs. She plans to spend next year as a social worker with the Lutheran Volunteer Corps before entering medical school in the fall of 1995.

She finished as Rochester's fifth all-time leading scorer and sixth all-time leading

■ Infractions case: Louisiana Tech University

I. Introduction.

Louisiana Tech University is a Division I member institution and a member of the Sun Belt Conference in the sport of men's basketball. It has an enrollment of approximately 10,100 students and sponsors seven men's and seven women's sports.

This case involved violations of NCAA extra-benefit, transportation, recruiting and ethical-conduct legislation in the men's basketball program.

A. Case chronology.

On June 8, 1993, the institution's president received an anonymous letter alleging serious violations of NCAA legislation in the men's basketball program. Copies of this letter also were sent to the institution's director of athletics and the chair of the athletics council. The institution communicated the information to the Sun Belt Conference, forwarded a copy of the letter to an NCAA director of enforcement and initiated an investigation of the allegations contained in the letter.

On July 9, 1993, the university submitted the results of its investigation to the NCAA director of enforcement and requested assistance in further investigation, including other potential violations involving the men's basketball program. During July 1993 through January 1994, several NCAA enforcement representatives interviewed individuals the institution had not interviewed and conducted follow-up interviews with some individuals the university had contacted. Representatives of the institution attended or received the results of these interviews. On November 11, 1993, the institution submitted a report that outlined seven violations of NCAA legislation involving the men's basketball program, including coaching staff members providing inducements to prospective student-athletes and extra benefits to enrolled student-athletes. From November 1993 through January 1994, the university and NCAA eligibility appeals staff resolved several issues related to the eligibility of three enrolled student-athletes.

On December 2, 1993, the assistant executive director for enforcement and eligibility appeals sent a preliminary letter of inquiry to the institution's president and informed the university of the availability of the summary-disposition process. On December 8, 1993, the university elected to handle this case through the summary-disposition process.

On February 1, 1994, the NCAA enforcement staff and Louisiana Tech jointly submitted a summary-disposition report to the NCAA Committee on Infractions. This report contained a description of the violations that the enforcement staff, university and involved coaches agreed occurred and the corrective actions and penalties taken by the institution.

In the report, the enforcement staff indicated that the university's internal investigation, combined with the enforcement staff's inquiries, was complete and thorough and that the university had cooperated with the NCAA. The enforcement staff and the institution agreed with the findings of violations contained in the report and that the case was major in nature. The head men's basketball coach and assistant men's basketball coach involved in the case agreed to participate in the summary-disposition process and accepted the findings in which they were named. In view of these facts, the case qualified for summary disposition.

On February 4, 1994, the Committee on Infractions considered the summary-disposition report. The committee accepted the findings of violations in the report but decided to impose additional penalties. The committee notified Louisiana Tech and the assistant men's basketball coach of the decision to impose additional penalties and of their right to appear before the committee if they did not accept the new penalties. The university and the assistant coach elected to accept the additional penalties contained in this report.

B. Summary of the findings of violations.

The violations in this case primarily involved the head men's basketball coach and an assistant men's basketball coach. Both coaches have since resigned from the university. The committee found that:

- The assistant coach paid for a prospective student-athlete's tuition and books at a local two-year institution.

- The assistant coach violated ethical-conduct standards.

- The head coach arranged the purchase of an airline ticket for a student-ath-

Case summary

The NCAA Committee on Infractions has placed the athletics program at Louisiana Tech University on probation for one year for violations of NCAA recruiting, extra-benefit, ethical-conduct and transportation legislation in the men's basketball program. Among the violations, the former assistant coach paid for junior college tuition and books for a prospective student-athlete.

The Committee on Infractions found NCAA rules violations that took place between 1991 and 1993, as reported by the institution, including:

- A former assistant coach paid for a prospective student-athlete's tuition and books at a local two-year institution.

- The former assistant coach violated ethical-conduct standards.

- The former head coach and former assistant coach arranged for or provided impermissible transportation to prospective and enrolled student-athletes. The violations involved seven individuals.

- These two coaches provided impermissible meals and lodging to prospective student-athletes.

- The former assistant coach arranged free tutoring sessions for a prospective student-athlete to assist him in meeting the eligibility requirements for athletics at Louisiana Tech.

The case was handled under the summary-disposition procedure, which the institution and the NCAA enforcement staff can agree to follow in major infractions cases. This process may be used if the member institution, involved individuals and NCAA enforcement staff agree on the facts and that those facts constitute major violations of NCAA legislation. The institution proposes suggested penalties, which the Committee on Infractions can accept, reject or change.

In this case, the committee accepted the findings of the violations in the summary-disposition report but decided to impose penalties in addition to those corrective actions and penalties taken by the university. The committee adopted the following penalties that were self-imposed by Louisiana Tech:

- Issued a public reprimand to the head men's basketball coach and placed him on probation.

- Prohibited the head men's basketball coach from transporting prospective or enrolled student-athletes.

Louisiana Tech took the following corrective actions, which were considered by the committee in imposing its penalties:

lete.

- The head and assistant coaches provided impermissible transportation to prospective and enrolled student-athletes.

- The coaches provided impermissible meals and lodging to prospective student-athletes.

- The assistant coach arranged free tutoring sessions for a prospective student-athlete to assist him in meeting the requirements for athletics eligibility at the institution.

- The institution failed to properly certify a coach to recruit off campus.

C. Summary of the penalties.

The committee considered and accepted the corrective actions and penalties taken by the university but found that the case warranted the additional penalties enumerated in Part I-C-2.

1. The committee accepted the following penalties self-imposed by the institution:

- Issued a public reprimand to the head men's basketball coach and placed him on probation.

- Prohibited the head men's basketball coach from transporting prospective or enrolled student-athletes.

2. The committee notified the institution and the involved assistant men's basketball coach of the additional penalties it imposed. All parties accepted the additional penalties:

- Public reprimand and censure of the institution.

- Probation for one year.

- Requirement that the institution implement a comprehensive educational program for athletics and submit compliance reports.

- Recertification of current athletics policies and practices.

- Requirement that during a two-year period, any NCAA institution that employs the former assistant men's basketball coach in an athletically related position must appear with him before the Committee on Infractions to consider whether limitations on his athletically related duties are appropriate.

II. Findings of violations of NCAA legislation.

A. Improper inducement to a prospective student-athlete [NCAA Bylaw 13.2.1].

On August 25, 1993, an assistant men's basketball coach provided $460 to a cashier in the business office at a junior college to pay the cost of tuition and books for a prospective student-athlete. The young man left the junior college without taking final exams, did not obtain his two-year degree and never enrolled at the university.

B. Unethical conduct [NCAA Bylaws 10.01 and 10.1-(c)].

The assistant men's basketball coach involved in this case failed to deport himself in accordance with the generally recognized high standards normally associated with the conduct and administration of intercollegiate athletics. The coach violated ethical-conduct standards through his involvement in Part II-A of this report. Specifically, the assistant coach acknowledged that he knew that paying for the prospective student-athlete's tuition and books violated NCAA legislation, even though he did not intend to obtain a recruiting advantage with this prospective student-athlete since the young man withdrew from classes before he could obtain the necessary credits to be eligible for competition at the institution.

C. Impermissible transportation and extra benefits provided to student-athletes and prospective student-athletes [NCAA Bylaws 13.2.1, 13.2.4.2, 13.6.1, 16.12.2.1 and 16.12.2.3-(c)].

On four occasions from 1991 through 1993, the head men's basketball coach arranged for the purchase of an airline ticket and arranged for or provided impermissible automobile transportation for two student-athletes and for two prospective student-athletes. During 1993, an assistant men's basketball coach twice provided impermissible transportation for two prospective student-athletes. Specifically:

1. On February 9, 1991, the head men's basketball coach provided his driver's license to a student athlete to assist the young man in purchasing an airline ticket. The head coach transported the student-athlete to the New Orleans airport after a men's basketball game in order for the young man to return to his hometown. The student-athlete was unable to purchase an airline ticket because he failed to present any form of identification. The head coach provided his driver's license to the student-athlete, and the young man used the head coach's identification to purchase an airline ticket in the head coach's name. The student-athlete traveled under the head coach's name.

2. In early June 1992, the head coach

- Notified the assistant coach that his employment would be terminated at the convenience of the university or that he would be given the opportunity to resign. The assistant coach resigned November 18, 1993.

- Declared a student-athlete ineligible until he repays the value of the transportation he received and his eligibility is restored through the NCAA appeals process. The student-athlete is not enrolled at the institution for the 1993-94 academic year.

- Terminated its recruitment of a prospective student-athlete.

- Strengthened institutional control of its intercollegiate athletics program by involving the athletics council in hiring all full-time athletics department personnel in coaching or administrative staff positions; requiring all full-time personnel to complete a systematic review of NCAA rules; advancing completion of its athletics department policies and procedures manual to January 1994; and requiring the associate athletics director for compliance to document the payment plans for each prospective and enrolled student-athlete attending summer school.

The committee imposed the following additional penalties:

- Public reprimand and censure of the institution.

- Placing the university on probation for one year and requiring the implementation of a comprehensive education program for athletics.

- Requiring recertification of current athletics policies and practices.

- Requiring that during a two-year period, any NCAA institution that employs the former assistant men's basketball coach in an athletically related position must appear with him before the NCAA Committee on Infractions to consider whether limitations on his athletically related duties are appropriate.

As required by NCAA legislation for any institution in a major infractions case, Louisiana Tech is subject to the NCAA's repeat violator provisions for a five-year period beginning on the date of the report.

Louisiana Tech and the coaches admitted the violations of NCAA rules under the summary-disposition procedure. Because they agreed to participate in this process and accepted the penalties proposed by the Committee on Infractions, the university and coaches waived the opportunity to appeal the decisions made in this case.

transported a prospective student-athlete from a train station to another city in order for the young man to enroll in summer school at a junior college. The prospect already had signed a National Letter of Intent to enroll at Louisiana Tech for the 1992-93 academic year.

3. In May 1993, the head coach lent his personal automobile to a student-athlete to run an errand.

4. In June 1993, the head coach transported a prospective student-athlete from a train station to another city. On the next day, the assistant coach transported the prospect to Ruston, Louisiana, for his summer employment. The prospect already had signed a National Letter of Intent to enroll at the institution for the 1993-94 academic year.

5. In early June 1993, the assistant coach transported a prospective student-athlete from an airport to Ruston for his summer employment. The prospect already had signed a National Letter of Intent to enroll at the institution for the 1993-94 academic year.

D. Impermissible transportation, lodging, meals and free tutoring provided to prospective student-athletes [NCAA Bylaws 13.2.1, 13.2.2-(h) and 13.6.1].

During July 1993, an assistant men's basketball coach provided impermissible transportation, lodging and a meal to two prospective student-athletes, and the head men's basketball coach provided impermissible meals to four prospective student-athletes. To assist a prospective student-athlete in passing an examination required for his two-year degree, the assistant coach arranged for free tutoring. The prospective student-athlete needed to obtain this degree to be eligible for athletics competition at the university.

On July 3, the assistant coach transported two prospective student-athletes to Ruston from another city. In Ruston, the assistant coach provided one night's lodging at his residence and one meal at no cost to the prospective student-athletes. On July 4, the assistant coach transported the two young men to the residence of the head men's basketball coach. The head coach provided a meal at no cost to these prospects and to two other prospective student-athletes. The assistant coach transported the first two prospective student-athletes to a dormitory on the university's campus where the young men received lodging at no cost. On July 5, 1993, the assistant coach transported them from the dormitory to another city. On two other occasions in July 1993, the assistant coach transported one of the prospects between another city and Ruston for tutoring sessions. The prospective student-athlete received approximately eight hours of free tutoring that assisted him in passing a standardized test required for his two-year degree and eligibility at Louisiana Tech. At the time these inducements were provided, all four prospective student-athletes had signed National Letters of Intent to enroll at the institution.

E. Impermissible recruiting by a coach [NCAA Bylaws 11.7.1.1.1.2, 11.7.5.1 and 13.1.2.1].

After a coaching change in the spring 1993, the institution permitted a coach to recruit off-campus without securing the proper certification.

III. Committee on Infractions penalties.

For the reasons set forth in Part II of this report, the Committee on Infractions found that this case involved several major violations of NCAA legislation.

A. Corrective actions taken by the university.

In determining the appropriate penalties to impose, the committee considered the institution's self-imposed corrective actions. Specifically, the institution:

1. Notified the assistant coach that his employment as assistant men's basketball coach would be terminated at the convenience of the university or that he would be given the opportunity to resign. The assistant coach resigned November 18, 1993.

2. Declared one of the involved student-athletes ineligible until he repays the value of the transportation he received and his eligibility is restored through the NCAA appeals process. The young man is not enrolled at the institution for the 1993-94 academic year.

3. Terminated its recruitment of one of the involved prospective student-athletes.

4. Strengthened the institutional control of its intercollegiate athletics program by:

- a. Involving the athletics council in hiring all full-time athletics department personnel who assume the positions of head coach, assistant coach or administrative staff.

See Infractions case, page 15 ►

Infractions case

b. Requiring all personnel hired as full-time employees in the athletics department to complete a systematic review of NCAA rules and regulations conducted by the institution's associate athletics director for compliance.

c. Advancing the completion date of its athletics department policies and procedures manual from July 1, 1994, to January 1, 1994.

d. Requiring the institution's associate athletics director for compliance to document the payment plans for each prospective and enrolled student-athlete attending summer school.

B. Penalties self-imposed by the university.

The institution reviewed NCAA Bylaw 19.5.2 and imposed the following penalties that it believed appropriate for the nature and extent of these violations:

1. Issued a public reprimand to the head coach with a letter to be inserted into his employment file at the institution. The head coach was placed on probation for the remainder of his current contract. The head coach resigned in February 1994.

2. Prohibited the head coach from transporting prospective or enrolled student-athletes to or from the university's campus for the duration of his probation.

C. Additional penalties imposed by the Committee on Infractions.

Although the Committee on Infractions agreed with and approved of the actions taken by the institution, the committee decided to impose the following additional penalties:

1. Public reprimand and censure.
2. One year of probation from the date of this report, April 12, 1994.
3. During the period of probation, the institution shall: (a) develop and implement a comprehensive educational program (e.g., seminars and testing) on NCAA legislation to instruct coaches, the faculty athletics representative, athletics department personnel and all university staff members with responsibility for the certification of student-athletes for admission, retention or competition; (b) submit a preliminary report to the administrator for the Committee on Infractions by May 15, 1994, setting forth a schedule for establishing this compliance and educational program, and (c) file a final report with the committee's administrator by May 1, 1995, indicating the progress made with this program during the probationary period. Particular emphasis should be placed on recruiting, extra-benefit and transportation legislation.

4. Recertification from the university's president that all of the institution's athletics policies and practices conform to all requirements of NCAA legislation.

5. If the former assistant men's basketball coach had still been employed at the institution, the university would have been required to show cause in accordance with Bylaw 19.5.2.1-(m) why it should not be subject to additional penalties if it had failed to take appropriate disciplinary action against him.

6. The former assistant men's basketball coach has been informed in writing by the NCAA that, due to his involvement in certain violations of NCAA legislation found in this case, if he seeks employment or affiliation in an athletically related position at an NCAA member institution during a two-year period (November 18, 1993, to November 18, 1995), he and the involved institution shall be requested to appear before the Committee on Infractions to consider whether the member institution should be subject to the show-cause procedures of Bylaw 19.5.2.1-(m), which could limit the former assistant coach's athletically related duties at the new institution for a designated period.

As required by NCAA legislation for any institution involved in a major infractions case, Louisiana Tech shall be subject to the provision of NCAA Bylaw 19.5.2.3, concerning repeat violators, for a five-year period beginning on the date of this report. Because Louisiana Tech and the involved coaches agreed to participate in the summary-disposition process, admitted the violations of NCAA rules and accepted the penalties proposed by the Committee on Infractions, the university and coaches waived the opportunity to appeal the decisions made in this case.

The Committee on Infractions wishes to advise the institution that it should take every precaution to ensure that the terms of the penalties in this case are observed. The committee intends to monitor the penalties during their effective periods, and any action contrary to the terms of any of the penalties shall be considered grounds for extending the institution's probationary period, as well as imposing more severe sanctions in this case.

Should any portion of any of the penalties in this case be set aside for any reason other than by appropriate action of the Association, the penalties shall be reconsidered by the Committee on Infractions. Should any action by NCAA Conventions directly or indirectly modify any provision of these penalties or the effect of the penalties, the committee reserves the right to review and reconsider the penalties.

chose instead to sponsor the 700/2,500 index. That index, along with a higher core-course requirement, was approved but now is being reviewed to determine if changes are necessary before it becomes effective in August 1995.

The trends in initial-eligibility rules are demonstrated in Report 93-04. Neither this report nor any other report from the Academic Performance Study recommends a course of action, although Report 93-05 does provide a decision analysis.

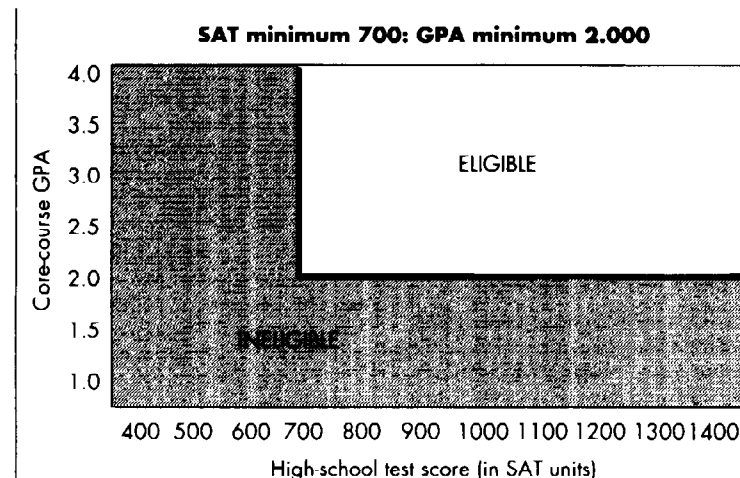

The other reports are:

■ Report 93-01 (Cohort trends in graduation rates for 1984-88 freshmen): Graduation rates for a sample of almost 10,000 student-athletes show a slow increase from the 1984-85 entering class to 1986-87 but a major jump in 1988. The increases are driven primarily by graduation rates for females, both black and white.

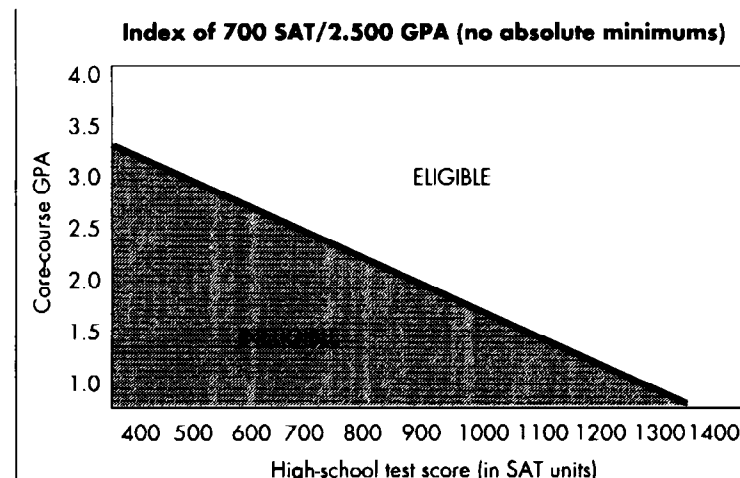

The proportion of females in the survey increased slightly over the period of the survey; in contrast, the proportion of minorities decreased with the 1986 entering class and had not regained its 1984 level by 1988. The 1986 class was the first to be affected by Proposition 48 legislation.

■ Report 93-02 (Cohort trends in high-school characteristics of 1984-1988 freshmen): Core grade-point average distributions of each cohort remain very similar between the 1984 entering class and 1988. However, the distribution of standardized-test scores (either the SAT or the ACT) show a marked change between cohorts. By 1988, a large number of student-athletes scored at or just above the test-score minimums (that is, SAT scores of between 700 and 775). The effect occurred in both white and black student-athlete groups, although the within-group proportion is much higher for blacks.

■ Report 93-03 (Cohort trends in relationships between high-school characteristics and college graduation): Standardized-test scores and core grade-point average requirements both have a positive predictive relationship to college graduation up to five years later. The relationships appear to be similar for both white and black student-athlete groups.

1988 Cohort Summary of Prop 16 Rule for All SAs

■ Report 93-05 (A decision analysis of initial-eligibility rules): These analyses attempt to isolate optimal rules using a risk-management strategy that was discussed in a 1991 Academic Performance Study report (91-05). Several analyses presented show a balance of benefits due to increased graduation rates and the costs due to false negatives and disproportionate impacts on minority graduates.

Eastern Water Polo Association adds separate women's division

The Eastern Water Polo Association (EWPA), a nonprofit organization that is administrator of the largest collegiate water polo conference in the United States, has created a women's division.

With 48 men's teams competing in both club and varsity competition, the association spans a geographical region from Arkansas to Maine.

Until now, the association was open only to collegiate men and a few coed programs during the traditional fall season. With the addition of a separate women's bracket during the spring, the association hopes to help develop additional women's teams via improved administration.

The women's bracket will include 11 teams, divided into two divisions:

Northern — Brown University; Colgate University; University of Massachusetts, Amherst; Queen's College (New York), and Wesleyan University, and Southern — University of Maryland, College Park; Pennsylvania State University; University of Pennsylvania; Princeton University; Slippery Rock University of Pennsylvania, and Villanova University.

The teams have completed division competition — which was conducted on two occasions in each division during recent weeks — and will participate in championship competition involving both divisions April 22-24 at Princeton.

Women's water polo has been around for many years, largely due to the efforts of coach Dick Hunkler at Slippery Rock. But it is hoped that the administrative services provided by the EWPA will help expand sponsorship.

The association provides manuals, conducts clinics and performs a number of services for member teams. In return, teams pay a yearly fee that includes everything but personal travel costs.

With tremendous growth expected in the years to come, EWPA representatives hope that the women's bracket will rival the men's bracket in participation numbers before the end of the century. The goal for the EWPA is to count 100 men's and women's teams as members by that time.

Further information regarding membership can be obtained by calling the EWPA office at 215/325-9407.

Hammer qualifying standard lowered

The Division III subcommittee of the NCAA Men's and Women's Track and Field Committee has lowered the provisional qualifying standard in the women's hammer throw.

The subcommittee lowered the provisional mark to 40 meters. The provisional standard had been 42.68 meters.

Women's hammer throw will be contested at this year's Division III outdoor championships for the first time.

The subcommittee noted that it would accept without penalty all proof-of-performance forms that meet the provisional standard.

University and chair of the Minority Opportunities and Interests Committee, which organized the workshop.

Harvey J. Coleman of the Atlanta-based Coleman Management Consultants and Ray C. Myers of Multiversity Associates of Minneapolis served as presenters for the workshop.

"I think the program went very well," Whitcomb said. "The consultants provided an atmosphere that was nonthreatening. They did not single out any one particular group. They also were very careful in getting everyone to participate."

Kathleen M. McNally, assistant athletics director at La Salle University and a member of the Committee on Women's Athletics, said she found the workshop beneficial. McNally said she did not take any particular expectations into the workshop.

"I thought it was very, very productive," said McNally, who is senior woman administrator at La Salle. "One of my thoughts going in was that we need to start to deal with diversity for our coaches and student-athletes (at La Salle). We've changed our demographics. We need to deal with this issue."

The workshop so impressed David G. Carter, president of Eastern Connecticut State University and a member of the Presidents Commission, that he offered his campus as a host of a NCAA diversity-training workshop. Anthony J. DiGiorgio, president of Winthrop University, was the other member of the Presidents Commission who attended.

Ex-Baylor women's coach loses bid for reinstatement

Former Baylor University head women's basketball coach Pam Bowers will not be reinstated pending the outcome of a $4 million lawsuit she filed against the school.

U.S. District Judge James Nowlin dismissed Bowers' request for an injunction reinstating her, saying April 13 that the evidence did not show that the former coach would be irreparably harmed if her request was not granted, according to The Associated Press.

Bowers was fired as coach last month after compiling a 168-257 record in 15 seasons. She has accused Baylor of discriminating against women's athletics; depriving her basketball program of assistant coaches, money and scholarships, and retaliating against her for filing a complaint based on Title IX, which requires equal opportunities for men and women in college athletics. A trial date in the case has not been set.

Bowers also maintains she was fired for reporting what she perceived as irregularities in the men's basketball program at Baylor last year.

Bowers remained coach until her March 28 firing.

Supreme Court denies Stanley's request to renew contract

Marianne Stanley lost another round with the U.S. Supreme Court in her attempt to win back her job as head women's basketball coach at the University of Southern California.

Stanley had filed a sex discrimination suit over the $54,000 salary discrepancy between her and George Raveling, the head men's basketball coach at Southern California, who reportedly is paid $150,000 a year.

But on April 13, Justice Sandra

Day O'Connor, for the second time in seven months, denied Stanley's request for a court order directing Southern California to renew Stanley's annual $96,000 contract with the Trojans, according to The Associated Press.

She sued the university and athletics director Mike Garrett for $8 million, alleging discrimination and retaliation in contract negotiations.

"I am so enthusiastic about it," said Carter, who is chair of the Presidents Commission Subcommittee on Minority Affairs. "I would like to volunteer Eastern as a site. That is how pleased I was."

Checking the scripts

One of the fundamental goals of the pilot diversity-training workshop was to prompt participants to evaluate and recognize the set of biases, prejudices and stereotypes that each individual carries. For many, these "scripts" of attitudes and beliefs contain a life's worth of images that can affect the hiring and promotion of people who visually are different or who demonstrate characteristics that are unlike those of people who make hiring and promotion decisions.

One exercise the consultants used in helping people begin to evaluate others from a clean script was to ask participants to list stereotypes that exist about various groups.

"They were trying to help us identify what scripts we have in life," Whitcomb said. "They tried to get us to see how these scripts get in our way."

"This was an exercise that you can use immediately," McNally said. "It is a little bit easier said than done, however."

"Challenging one's assumptions and stereotypes is what education is all about," said Claire L. Gaudiani, president of Connecticut College and Division III chair of the Presidents Commission. "The challenge is not to make decisions on the basis of one's assumptions or stereotypes."

Gaudiani did not attend the pilot diversity-ty-training workshop but said that similar seminars have been conducted on her campus. She said diversity training does not and should not involve attacking people or exposing them before others.

"(Diversity) challenges people with goodwill to look at themselves," Gaudiani said. "This is how we become better. It helps to give (a person) a broader perspective, less narrow frames of reference."

Still, creating an awareness of and maintaining an understanding of diversity cannot be accomplished in a two-day meeting. Attitudes, values and beliefs constantly must be challenged in each individual so that an appreciation of differences between one's self and another person can be evaluated without bias.

"This is an ongoing process," Gaudiani said. "It's learning to listen well to what your colleagues of different backgrounds are telling you. This is a process, not an event."

"It's a slow process," McNally said. "But I think it is going to be extremely useful. It has got to hit all levels (of athletics). You could defeat the purpose if you shut out a particular group."

Whitcomb said one key to achieving real change through diversity-training workshops is for participants to learn not to depend on others for answers and solutions to achieving greater diversity on campuses or in conference offices.

"People should come into the workshop with a blank sheet," Whitcomb said. "You never know what agendas people come in with. The consultants did not give prescriptions for change....

"Most individuals look at this and say, 'Tell me how to go make it better.' The challenge really is to assess ourselves and our attitudes, assess our own scripts. We need to assess those things that we think and do consciously and unconsciously."

Carter and Gaudiani said they are optimistic that diversity-training workshops in athletics can serve as a catalyst for American society. The key, they say, will be to get everyone involved — from presidents to athletics directors to student-athletes.

"I think you should have students involved," Carter said. "I believe the mix last week was a very good mix. Having a cross-section makes a lot of sense."

Gaudiani and Carter believe that approaches such as the NCAA Fellows Program and the concept of a National Girls Sports Days — which the Presidents Commission endorsed at its March 31-April 1 meeting (see April 13 issue of The NCAA News) — are ways to begin to lay the foundation for more diversity in intercollegiate athletics.

"We are saying that there are a variety of programs that we can bring about that we only have given lip service to in previous years," Carter said. "It's a four-letter word — work. But we can make it happen. I'm locked in. There is no way to go but forward."

"We've got to make a pipeline for women and minorities," Gaudiani said. "If we really want to solve the problem, we have to develop a pipeline. (Creating) legislation is not the only way."

■ Legislative assistance

1994 Column No. 16

Correction: 1994 NCAA Convention Proposal No. 113

Spring football practice — Divisions I-A and I-AA

Institutions should note that the second paragraph of Legislative Assistance Column No. 10, Item No. 2 (March 9, 1994, edition of the NCAA News) should read as follows:

"Further, with the adoption of Proposal No. 113 (effective immediately), Divisions I-A and I-AA institutions have the discretion to determine the practice activities that may occur during noncontact sessions (e.g., use of blocking dummies), provided no football gear or protective equipment other than headgear, shoulder pads, shoes, pants and porous light-weight jerseys are worn by the involved student-athletes."

Committee seeks two ex-members of equity task force

The NCAA Committee on Women's Athletics is recommending that two former members of the NCAA Gender-Equity Task Force be appointed as consultants to the committee for a period of two years.

The Committee on Women's Athletics and former members of the NCAA Gender-Equity Task Force met April 14 in Atlanta to review the status of assignments made by the NCAA Council in response to the task force's gender-equity report.

Because the task force's work during the past year relates directly to the focus of the Committee on Women's Athletics, the committee believed a "bridge" between the two groups would be helpful, according to Janet M. Justus, who becomes NCAA director of education resources May 2 and now serves as director of eligibility. She is staff liaison to the committee.

"The task force talked about women's issues exclusively over several months," Justus said.

"There was a lot of wisdom in the group. The committee, at the recommendation of chair Phyllis Howlett, saw this meeting as a valuable exercise, and as a way to absorb the important discussions the task force members had...and to glean insight from the topics they discussed.

"The task force provided background information and ideas that the committee can use for the next couple of years."

In other matters, the Committee on Women's Athletics:

- Agreed to develop a mechanism to monitor the number of women appointed to NCAA committees. The task force has recommended that women's representation be increased beyond the 30 percent minimum on all NCAA committees.

- Endorsed the creation of a new education services group and the appointment of the director of education resources, whose responsibilities will include women's issues. Justus was named to that position in March.

Correction: 1994-95 NCAA Guide for the Two-Year College Student-Athlete

Divisions I and II institutions should note that there is an error in the official visit section on page 16 of the two-year college guide. The first sentence in Item No. 5 incorrectly indicates that prior to a school providing expenses for an official visit, a student must give the institution a score from a PSAT, an SAT, a PLAN (formally PACT) or an ACT test taken on a national testing date under national testing conditions. During its September 10, 1992, telephone conference, the NCAA Interpretations Committee determined that a prospect who is transferring from a two-year or four-year institution is not required to present the certifying institution with a score from a PSAT, SAT, PACT Plus or ACT taken on a national testing date under national testing conditions prior to receiving an expense-paid visit from that institution. Accordingly, the first two sentences in Item No. 5 should be deleted.

NCAA Bylaw 13.16.2.1 ACT and SAT scores

Divisions I and II institutions should note that during its March 22, 1994, telephone conference, the Interpretations Committee reviewed the provisions of Bylaw 13.16.2.1 and determined that an institution may pay the fee for a prospect's ACT or SAT score to be sent from the testing agency to the NCAA Initial-Eligibility Clearinghouse, provided the prospect has signed a National Letter of Intent or, for institutions not subscribing to the National Letter of Intent, has signed a written offer of admission and/or financial aid with that institution.

If an institution has a question or comment regarding this column, such correspondence should be directed to Nancy L. Mitchell, assistant executive director for legislative services, at the NCAA national office. This information is available on the Collegiate Sports Network.

Ruling

Supreme Court refuses to reinstate Nevada law

1992, ruling that the law restricted the NCAA's ability to apply its rules consistently in all 50 states and prevented Nevada member institutions from fulfilling their contractual responsibilities in the Association.

That decision cleared the way for the Association to proceed with and eventually complete an infractions case involving the University of Nevada, Las Vegas.

Appealed by coach

The ruling, however, was appealed by Jerry Tarkanian — former men's basketball coach at Nevada-Las Vegas and one of the defendants in the NCAA's suit — and other individuals associated with Nevada-Las Vegas.

On appeal, the Ninth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld McKibben's ruling. The Supreme Court's decision ends the appeal.

"We're pleased that this ends this litigation concerning the state of Nevada's legislation with respect to its due process requirements in connection with the NCAA enforcement program," said John J. Kitchin of Swanson, Midgley, Gangwere, Kitchin & McLarney, attorney for the

"It reaffirms the NCAA's nationwide, uniform enforcement process. Hopefully this will put to rest attempts at similar legislation in other jurisdictions."

Three other states — Nebraska, Florida and Illinois — also have statutes that place judicial-like restraints on the Association. Nevada was the first state where such a statute affected the Association's ability to proceed with an infractions case.

David Swank, chair of the NCAA Committee on Infractions and professor of law at the University of Oklahoma, also reacted to the Supreme Court decision.

Ruling carries responsibility

"Today's Supreme Court ruling recognized the right of institutions of higher education who are members of the NCAA to govern and control their athletics programs, but the ruling also carries with it the responsibility of the Association to deal fairly with its members," Swank said.

"To ensure that fairness, significant changes have been made in the enforcement process."

Among those actions were a number of policy and procedural changes by the Committee on Infractions, in response to recommendations by the NCAA Special Committee to Review the Enforcement and Infractions Process.

Among the changes adopted by the committee were summary-disposition and expedited hearing procedures designed to speed up the processing of an infractions case that does not involve disputed facts.

At the 1993 NCAA Convention, the membership adopted legislation to establish an Infractions Appeals Committee. That committee is charged with considering timely appeals by member institutions of findings of major violations and/or penalties imposed by the Committee on Infractions.

Finally, at the 1994 Convention, the membership adopted a mission statement stating objectives of the enforcement program. Among the stated objectives are fairness of procedures, timely and equitable resolution of infractions cases, and fairness to uninvolved student-athletes, coaches, administrators, competitors and other institutions when appropriate penalties are imposed.

Eligibility restored to 29 student-athletes in tennis

During the last two weeks, the NCAA eligibility appeals staff has restored eligibility for 29 student-athletes who were found to have violated rules concerning receipt of prize money or improper reimbursements at professional tennis tournaments.

About one month ago, the NCAA received records indicating that approximately 60 student-athletes from 32 institutions received prize money or amateur reimbursements that depended on their finish in professional tennis tournaments. After further information was gathered, the institutions were asked to inquire into these situations and to handle them through the NCAA's standard eligibility procedures, if necessary.

"The large number of cases involved has tested our procedures and our staff," noted NCAA Director of Eligibility Janet M.

Justus. "Both have met our goal of minimizing the time it takes to render a decision and, if their eligibility can be restored, to get the student-athlete back into competition."

40 cases to date

Of the 40 cases processed as of noon April 15, 11 student-athletes were completely cleared of any violation; two were found to have declared themselves a professional in the past and their eligibility was not restored, and 27 were found to have violated the rules but have had their eligibility restored. Most of those 27 players were required to sit out 10 percent of their regular-season matches (two to three matches) to regain their eligibility.

In the 21 outstanding cases, the institutions still are collecting information. More cases are now coming in as institutions check with all their tennis student-athletes and self-report any additional cases.

Rules misunderstood

These particular cases apparently stem from a widespread misunderstanding of NCAA amateurism rules on the part of tennis student-athletes and coaches. According to NCAA rules, student-athletes cannot accept prize money based on their place finish in a tournament or meet, although they can accept reimbursement for their expenses.

That reimbursement cannot, however, depend on what place the athlete finishes in the tournament. In ATP Tour events, for example, amateur athletes can receive reimbursements up to the amount they would have won in prize money. European tournaments generally do not have a system for amateur reimbursements, further complicating the matter.

The athletes involved accepted the prize money or reimbursements, believing that it was not a violation of NCAA rules as long as the amount did not exceed their expenses.

When rules violations are found that affect a student-athlete's eligibility, the school must declare the individual ineligible and hold him or her out of competition. NCAA member institutions have agreed that they will enforce NCAA eligibility rules themselves; the institution, not the NCAA staff, is responsible for determining whether or not a student-athlete has broken an NCAA rule.

If a student-athlete is declared ineligible, the institution may then submit an appeal to the NCAA eligibility appeals staff to ask if that student-athlete's eligibility can be restored. An aim of the restoration process is to remove whatever competitive advantage the student-athlete may have gained from violating the rule.

Processing cases quickly

The eligibility appeals staff is processing the cases as quickly as it receives them, in order to get the student-athletes back on the tennis court. "Because it's so close to the end of the season, we want to make sure that all cases are decided before postseason competition begins," Justus said. Most of these cases have been handled in one or two days from the time complete information is received from the institution, and sometimes less.

The ATP Tour and the USTA have cooperated fully with the NCAA. Meetings with both groups have been scheduled to discuss ways to prevent this type of situation from happening in the future.
